Reviews

This ebook is worth acquiring. Better then never, though i am quite late in start reading this one. You will not truly feel monotony at at any time of your own time (that's what catalogues are for about if you ask me).

Wolf and Rayet, in 1867 at the Paris Observatory, in the constellation Cygnus. M. Respighi, in 1871 at Madras, found that γ Argus has a similar spectrum. Professor E. C. Pickering discovered three others, at Cambridge, while sweeping for gaseous nebulas with a telescope provided with a spectroscopic eye-piece. By the same method Dr. Copeland, at Puno, Peru, detected five more; and at Dun Edit, using an object-glass prism, he found a sixth. The astronomers of Harvard College Observatory have the great credit of discovering forty-two stars of this type since 1888. They were found, for the most part by Mrs. M. Fleming, by means of the bright bands in their photographed spectra on the Henry Draper Memorial plates. The photographs were made at Cambridge and in Peru. Communicated by the author. The fifty-five Wolf-Rayet stars now known are arranged in the order of their right ascensions in Table I, with their catalogue numbers and magnitudes in the second and third columns. The anonymous star No. 54 was observed here, and I estimated its magnitude at 10. The discoverer of each star is noted in the last column. (W. - R. Wolf-Rayet; R. Respighi; P. Pickering; C. Copeland; H. C. O. Harvard College Observatory) Professor Pickering has pointed out that all these stars are near the central line of the Milky Way, and have a tendency to occur in groups. By assuming the position of the North Pole of the Galaxy...
