What, is it gone! said Harold doubtfully, as he ventured to open his eyes. Hush ! boy--hush! or I will strangle thee on the spot, whispered Oscar. But Harold could see nothing now. She has descended for the ring!--There! there!--now look--she has itshe has it! how it glitters upon her pale finger!--Harold, give me thy hand--I cannot see thee--where art thou--farewell--I would look upon thee, would kiss thee once, ere we part forever, for I love thee--but--I cannot, dare not take my eyes from her face again. Farewell! I am going.--Twelve years ago, I lost her--by merely turning away my eyes--for twelve years I have hunted her--through earth--through air--through sky and ocean.--Farewell--be quick--be quick--This is DEGREES the appointed hour--midnight--dearest! I cannot come till midnight is accomplished--thou knowest that.--It DEGREES was here, Harold--one moment more--my heart beats time--It was here that I--I--I--slew her--here! in s the middle of the ocean--and here we meet--dear creai ture!--broken heart, with broken heart--the ocean our sepulchre--our bridal chamber! Before Harold could put out his hand--Oscar s night . dress brushed by him, and he saw him alight upon the -a water, at an amazing distance, astern. His first impulse was to follow him--but Leopold, with his head in his bosom, still clung distractedly about his neck--His next f was--but it was too late, the vessel was sailing like a ha wk ! through the heavens, --to call for assistance. He shriekl ed--but he could not make...
