In consequence of the family war to which our attention had been called at Torong-Yauwise, a good many Arekunas had gone towards the west; the provision fields had been destroyed by the victorious party, and left uncultivated. Game was neither seen in the valley nor on the mountains, and the small-sized fish in the rivers, not longer than a finger, belonging to the genus H yposioma, would need to have been caught by thousands to satisfy such half starved men. Vegetables were the...
