

The Palladian Way: A Classical Walk Past the Greatest Estates of "Middle" England

By Guy Vowles, Nicholas Reardon

Reardon Publishing. Paperback. Book Condition: new. BRAND NEW, The Palladian Way: A Classical Walk Past the Greatest Estates of "Middle" England, Guy Vowles, Nicholas Reardon, The Palladian Way is the brainchild of Cotswold walker Guy Vowles. It was born out of a previous idea for a long distance walk between Oxford and Bath but was extended northwards to Buckingham where the author was educated nearby. The realization that there was a Palladian bridge at Prior Park outside Bath to match the one at Stowe suggested a suitable title and the discovery of many classical houses and large estates along the route has helped to make the trail more than just another long walk. The majority of this 200km (125m) trail passes through beautiful countryside and many interesting villages with a wealth of historical background so that walkers can discover parts of England they would not normally visit. THE MAKING OF A LONG DISTANCE TRAIL The inspiration for a new long distance walk can come from many sources. In my case it was a loan of a book. "The Wayfarers Journal" is an elaborate production describing a number of routes which a small, rather quirky group of men who called themselves...
